LOCATION OF PLACE:

- Block 1, Section 25, Acton.
  - Area bounded by Gordon Street (to the north), Edinburgh Avenue (to the south), Marcus Clarke Street (to the east), and by Becker House (to the west).

FEATURES INTRINSIC TO THE HERITAGE SIGNIFICANCE OF THE PLACE:

The features intrinsic to the heritage significance of the place are:

- (a) the building, including Fellows Court and Boden Court;
  - (b) its setting; and
  - (c) the wisteria (Wisteria sinensis) in Fellows Court.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE:

Ian Potter House (known until 1985 as Beauchamp House) is historically significant for its associations with the Federal Capital Commission's building program for the transfer of public servants from Melbourne to Canberra in 1927. Together with other hostels built around the same time, it represents an early phase in Canberra's developing social and cultural history. It was originally used to accommodate female public servants, only later being used by both female and male public servants until the early 1970s, when it was also a guesthouse for visitors to Canberra.

The exterior of the building is a significant example of the Inter-War Georgian Revival style of architecture. It was the winning design by Melbourne architects, Anketell and Kingsley Henderson, in a competition held by the Federal Capital Commission to produce ideas for four hostels needed for the growing population of the new Federal Capital. It was the first of four guest houses designed by architects outside the Commission, to provide some variety in the design of the government hostels, most of which had been designed by Commonwealth architect, John Smith Murdoch. It was also the first building of a reinforced concrete structure in Canberra.

The building has associations with Sir Ian Potter, a highly respected entrepreneur and philanthropist.
